quested, 'a short tribute to Mr. Tucker as a citizen and teacher.' Will you allow me to say an added word about him as a Christian. He was a whole-souled man, and could not be anything by haives. He was an ordained elder of the Presby-terlan Church; a regular attendant, not only on the Sunday services, but on the weekly gatherings for prayer as well. A generous contributor to every department of 'thristian work, he was always the loyal friend and supporter of the pastor. It was not possible for him to be a sectariat, much less a blayt; he loved all Christians and all churches. He took an active part in worships, joining in the singing, and leading, when asked, the prayers of the congregation, with such simplicity, sincerity and emotion as showed that he was often at the mercy seat.
